[Dugan is the third of the twelve Anglo-Saxon verbs called præterito-præsentia, and given under āgan, q. v. The inf. dugan and the pret. deah, pl. dugon, retaining præterite inflections, are taken from the p. of a strong verb deogan, p. deah, pl. dugon; pp. dogen, ascertained from deah; pl. dugon, which shews the ablaut or internal change of the vowel in the p. of the twelfth class of Grimm's division of strong verbs [Grm. i. p. 898; Koch, i. p. 252], and requires by analogy with other verbs of the same class the inf. deogan and the pp. dogen; thus we find the original verb deogan, p. deah, pl. dugon; pp. dogen. The weak p. dohte, pl. dohton [= duhte, duhton], is formed regularly from the inf. dugan. The same præterito-præsens may be generally observed in the following cognate words:—

dulmūnus; gen. pl. dulmūna; m. The war-ship of the Greeks, which king Alfred assures us would hold a thousand men; longa nāvis. These ships were the μακρὰ πλοῖα or νῆες μακρὰι, generally called in Greek ὁ δρόμων, avos, m. the light war-vessel of the Greeks. They were the longe nāves the long war-ships of the Romans, which had often more than fifty rowers. The Romans called their vessel drōmo, ōnis, defining it as a fast rowing vessel, evidently deriving their word from the Greek δρόμων, Cod. Just. 1, 27, 1, § 8; Cassiod. Var. 5, 17, init. where it is described as 'trifēme vehiculū rēmōrum tantum nūmērūm prōdens, sed hōmīnum faciēs diligenter abscondens.' Some suppose that Alfred derived his word dulmūnus from the Icel. drómundr, m. which Egilsson, in his Lexicon Poëticum, Hafnise, 8vo. 1860, explains 'nāvis grandior, cūjus genēris tantum extra regiōnes septentrionāles, ut in mārī mediterrāneo, mentio fit,' S. E. i. 582, 3, Orkn. 82, 1, 3. Vigfusson, in his Icelandic-English Dictionary, 4to. Oxford, 1869-1874, in drómundr gives only the Latin and Greek, and O. H. Ger. drahemond as cognates. What Orosius calls longa nāves, Alfred translates dulmūnus in Anglo-Saxon. As we read in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle of A. D. 807; Th. i. 174, 41,—Hēt Ælfrēd cyng timbrian lang-scipu ongen ða æscas king Alfred commanded to build long-ships against those ships, v. æsc IV.—Alfred, in his translation of Orosius, says:—Ær he [Ercol] ongan mid Cræca scyppum, ðe mon dulmūnus hætt, ðe man segh ðæt ān scip mæge ān þūsend manna before he [Hercules] began with Grecian ships, which are called dulmūnus, of which it is said that one ship can hold a thousand men, Ors. 1, 10; Bos. 33, 31-33. He [Xersis] hæfde scipa ðæra mycclena dulmūna ān m and ii hund he [Xerses] had one thousand two hundred of the large ships, dulmūnus, Ors. 2, 5; Bos. 46, 32, 33. v. [Durran is the fourth of the twelve Anglo-Saxon verbs, called præterito-præsentia, and given under āgan, q. v. The inf. durran and the pres. dear, pl. durrōn, retaining preterite inflections, are taken from the p. of the verb, ascertained from dear, pl. durrōn, which shews the ablaut or internal change of the vowel in the p. tense of the twelfth class of Grimm's division of strong verbs [Grm. i. p. 898; Koch, i. p. 252], and requires by analogy with other verbs of the same class the inf. deorran=deorsan [Goth. daursan] and the pp. dorren. Thus we find the original verb deorran=deorsan; p. dear, pl. durrōn; pp. dorren. The weak p. dorste, pl. dorston [=durste, durston], is formed regularly from the inf. durran=dursan. The same præterito-præsens may be generally observed in the following cognate words:—

A. Anglo-Saxon words, containing the short or unaccented vowel e, are often represented by modern English words of the same meaning, having the sound of e in net, met; as, Nett, bedd, weddian, hell, well, denn, fenn, webb, ende.

2. The short e in Anglo-Saxon generally comes (1) before a double consonant; as, Nebb, weccan, tellan, weddian: (2) before any two consonants; as, Twentig, sendan, bernan: (3) before one or two consonants, when followed by a long or by a final vowel; as, Sele, henne. 3. e is often contracted from ea; as, Ceaster and cester a burgh, fortified town; eahta and ehta eight.

B. Words containing the long or accented Anglo-Saxon ē are very frequently represented by English terms of the same signification, with the sound of e in heel; as, Rēc, mēd, hēl, cwēn, gēs, fēt, tēþ, hēdan, fēdan, mētan to meet. Some remarks on the accented ē in Grimm's Deutsche Grammatik, 2nd Edit. Göttingen, small 8vo. 1822, vol. i. pp. 229, 230: 3rd Edit. small 8vo. 1840, vol. i. pp. 361, 362, may be found useful, and are especially recommended to the student of Anglo-Saxon.

2. It is, however, difficult to say when the ē is long in Anglo-Saxon, but it may be useful to remember, the ē is often long before the single consonants l, m, n, r, c, d, f, g, s, t, and þ; as, in hēl a heel, fēlan to feel, dēman to deem, think, fēnix a phoenix, hēr here, gēs geese, fēt feet, fēdan to feed, tēþ teeth, bēc books, blēgan a blain, drefan to trouble.

C. The Runic M not only stands for the vowel e, but also for the name of the letter in Anglo-Saxon, eh a war-horse. v. eh a war-horse, and RUN.

-e, in the termination of nouns, denotes a person; as, Hyrde, es; m. A shepherd, from hyrdan to guard. The vowel -e is also used to form nouns denoting inanimate objects; as, Cýle, es; m. Cold: cwide, es; m. A saying, testament: brice, es; m. A breach: wlite, es; m. Beauty. These are mostly derived from verbs, and are masculine, but when derived from adjectives they are feminine; as, Rihtwīse, an; f. Justice.

-e is the termination of derivative adjectives; as, Wyrde worthy, from wyrþ worth: forþgegne forthcoming, increasing.

-e is also the usual letter by which adverbs are formed from adjectives ending in a consonant; as, Rihte rightly, sōþlice truly, yfele badly.

ealdor-man, -mann, -mon, ealdur-, aldor-, eldor-, es; m. [eald old, not only in age, but in knowledge, v. eald, hence ealdor an elder; man hōmo].

I. an elderman, alderman, senator, chief, duke, a nobleman of the highest rank, and holding an office inferior only to that of the king; mājor nātu, sēnātor, prōcer, princeps, primas, dux, præfectus, tribūnus, quicunque sēt aliis grādu aut nātu mājor. The title of Ealdorman or Aldorman denoted civil as well as military pre-eminence. The word ealdor or aldor in Anglo-Saxon denotes princely dignity; in Beowulf it is used as a synonym for cuning, peōden, and other words applied to royal personages. Like many other titles of rank in the various Teutonic languages, it, strictly speaking, implies age, though practically this idea does not survive in it any more than it does in the word Senior, the original of the feudal term Seigneur. Every shire had its ealdorman, who was the principal judicial officer of the shire, and also the leader of its armed force. The internal regulations of the shire, as well as its political relation to the whole kingdom, were under his immediate guidance and supervision,—the scir-gefeā, or sheriff, being little more than his deputy, and under his control. The dignity of the ealdorman was supported by lands within his district, which appear to have passed with the office,—hence the phrases, ðæs ealdormonnes lond, mearc, gemæro, etc. which so often occur. The ealdorman had also a share of the fines and other monies levied to the king's use; though, as he was invariably appointed from among the higher nobles, he must always have possessed lands of his own to the extent of forty hides, v. Hist. Eliens. ii. 40. The ealdormen of the several shires seem to have been appointed by the king, with the assent of the higher nobles, if not of the whole witenagemōt, and to have been taken from the most trustworthy, powerful, and wealthy of the nobles of the shire. The office and dignity of ealdorman was held for life,—though sometimes forfeited for treason and other grave offences; but it was not strictly hereditary:—Fram ðām brōðrum and ðām ealdormannum a fratribus ac maioribus, Bd. 5, 14; S. 634, 10; 5, 19; S. 637, 6. II. The new constitution introduced by Cnut, who reigned in England from A. D. 1014 to 1035, reduced the ealdorman to a subordinate position,—one eorl, Nors. jarl, being placed over several shires. The Danish kings ruled by their eorlas or jarls, and the ealdormen disappeared from the shires. Gradually the title ceased altogether, except in the cities, where it denoted an inferior judicature, much as it now does among ourselves:—Dis is ðonne seō worulduncde gerādnes, ðe ic [Cnut] wille, mid mīnan witenan rāde, ðæt man healde ofer eall Engla land this is then the secular ordinance which I [Cnut], with the counsel of my witan, will, that it be observed over all the land of the English, L. ELN, e; f. I. an ELL, a measure of length, the space from the point of the elbow to the end of the middle finger, eighteen inches. This is the Heb. אַמְמָא [amma] a cubit: the Lat. cūbitus a cubit, ulna an ell. Liddell and Scott say πῆχυς = cūbitus, and ulna an ell properly contain twenty-four δάκτυλοι [δάκτυλος, the breadth of a finger, about $\frac{1}{4}$ of an English inch]:—Τίς δὲ ἐξ ὧν μετρίων δύναται προσθεῖναι ἐπὶ τὴν ἡλικίαν αὐτοῦ πῆχυς ἓνα; Mt. 6, 27; ἢ ὡς ἱσχυρά μαρτυροῦνται; Mt. Bos. Goth. 6, 27; mag anaaukan ana wāhstū seinana aleina aīna? Mt. Bos. Goth. 6, 27; quis autem vestrum cōgitans pōtēst adjicere ad stātūram suam cūbitum ūnum? Mt. Vulg. 6, 27; hwylc eower mæg sōplice gepencan ðæt he ge-eācnige āne elne to hys anlicnesse? Mt. Bos. 6, 27; Wycl. says cubite; Tynd. cubit. It is therefore presumed that the Grk. πῆχυς = Heb. אַמְמָא was eighteen inches; for twenty-four δάκτυλοι $\times$ by $\frac{3}{4}$ = [75] = eighteen inches. In the parallel passage, Lk. Bos. 12, 25, there is not any Gothic; the Grk. Lat. and A. Sax. are the same as in the preceding verse. Lk. Bos. 12, 25 is, therefore, not quoted. Hi wæron unfeor fram lande, swylce hit wære twā hund elna non longe erant a terra, sed quasi cūbitis diuētis [18 in. $\times$ 200 = 200 ft. = 300 ft.], Jn. Bos. 21, 8. Fiftena stōd deōp ofer dūnum se drencfōd monnes elna the deluge stood deep over the downs, fifteen ells of man, Cd. 69; Th. 84, 17; Gen. 1399. Eln ulna, Glos. Brux. Recd. 38, 62; Wrt. Voc. 64, 71. II. the Royal Persian ell, or cubit, is very nearly 20½ inches; for Herodotus says that the πῆχυς βασιλῆως, bk. i. § 178, is 3 δάκτυλοι longer than the common Grk. πῆχυς=cubit or ell: 24 δάκτυλοι, i. e. 24 + 3 = 27 δάκτυλοι; 27 × $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch and $\frac{1}{2}$ of an 8th, δάκτυλος a finger's breadth is about $\frac{7.5}{100}$ of an inch, that is $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch and $\frac{1}{12}$ of an 8th = $\frac{3}{4} + \frac{1}{96}$ = $\frac{76}{100}$ = .76 = 20 $\frac{37}{100}$ = 20½ inches, and $\frac{1}{100}$ or $\frac{1}{32}$ of an inch]—Se weall Babilōnes is fittig elna brād, and twā hund elna heāh . . . and ymbūtan done weall is se mæsta dic . . . and wīdūtan dani dice is geworht twēga elna heah weall the wall of Babylon is fifty ells broad, and two hundred ells high . . . and round the wall is a very great dike . . . and outside the dike a wall is built two ells high, Ors. 2, 4; Bos. 44, 23–28.

III. the ell in A. Sax. was sometimes about 24 inches, or 2 feet:—Se hwæl bīp micle lassa ðonne oðre hwalas: ne bīp he lengra ðonne syfan elna lang; ac, on his ægnum lande, ða beoþ eahta and feowertiges elna lange, and ða mæstan, fiftiges elna lange; ðara, he sæde, ðæt he syxa sum oisloge syxtig on twām dagum this whale is much less than other whales: it is not longer than seven ells; but, in his own country [Norway], they are eight and forty ells long, and the largest, fifty ells long; of these, he said, that he was one of six, who killed sixty in two days, Ors. 1, 1; Bos. 20, 18–23. In giving the size of the Horse-whale or Walrus, and of the Whale, Ohthere, a Norwegian, would most probably calculate by the measure of Scandinavia, the ell of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. Molbeck, in his Dansk Ordbog, thus defines it:—'Alen, et vist længdemaal, som deles i 24 tommer . . . Tomme een 12te fod, og een 24de alen,' . . . That is, Ell, a certain measure of length, which is divided into 24 inches . . . An inch one 12th of a foot, and one 24th of an ell. King Alfred, in his Anglo-Saxon version of Orosius, followed the calculation of Ohthere, who says that the Horse-whale or Walrus is 7 ells long, that is 14 feet, and the Whales 48 ells, and the largest 50, that is 96 feet, and the largest 100 feet long. These calculations approach very nearly to those given by Mr. Broderip, who says the length of the Walrus is from 10 to 15 feet, and Dr. Scoresby, who gives the length of the Physalus to be about 100 feet, Ors. Eng. p. 43, note 45.

2. ells of different lengths were used in Anglo-Saxon times; and, even in the present day, 3 sorts of ells are known in England:—The Flemish ell is 3 quarters of a yard or 27 inches; the English 5 quarters or 45 inches; and the French 6 quarters or 54 inches. D. 360: in Anglo-Saxon about 895. The date of its use in other parts of Europe may be ascertained by referring to the languages quoted above, and in the list of contractions where the names and dates of the authors are given.

EORL, es; m. I. an Anglo-Saxon nobleman of high rank, the earl of the Danes, about the same as an ealdorman. He who was in early times styled ealdorman, was afterwards denominated an earl; cōmes, sātelles principis. This title, which was introduced by the Jutes of Kent, occurs frequently in the laws of the kings of that district, the first mention of it being:—Gif on eorles tūne man mannan ofslæhp xii scillinga gebēte if a man slay a man in an earl's town, let him make compensation with twelve shillings, L. Ethb. 13; Th. i. 6, 9, 10. Its more general use among us dates from the later Scandinavian invasions, and though originally only a title of honour, it became in later times one of office, nearly supplanting the older and more Saxon one of ealdorman:—Swā we eác setþa be eallum hādum, ge ceorle ge eorle so also we ordain for all degrees, whether to churl or earl, L. Alf. pol. 4; Th. i. 64, 3. Se eorl nolde nā gefwærian the earl would not consent, Chr. 1051; Ing. 227, 13, 23; 228, 4, 28, 35, 36; 229, 10, 21, 25, 26.

Ēst-mere, es; m. [est=east east, mere a lake] The Frische Haff, or fresh water lake which is on the north of east Prussia. Hav or Haf signifies a sea, in Danish and Swedish. It is written Haff in German, and it is now used to denote all the lakes connected with the rivers on the coast of Prussia and Pomerania. The Frische Haff is about sixty miles long, and from six to fifteen broad. It is separated by a chain of sand banks from the Baltic Sea, with which, at the present time, it communicates by one strait called the Gat. This strait is on the north-east of the Haff, near the fortress of Pillau, Malte Brun's Univ. Geog. vol. vii. p. 14. This Gat, as Dr. Bell informs me, 'seems to have been formed, and to be kept open by the superior force of the Pregel stream.' This gentleman has a perfect knowledge of the Frische Haff and the neighbourhood, as he received his early education in the vicinity, and matriculated at the University of Königsberg, near the west end of the Haff. I am indebted to Dr. Bell for the map of the celebrated German Historian, Professor Voigt, adapted to his 'Geschichte Preussens von den ältesten Zeiten, 9 vols. 8vo, Königsberg, 1827-1830.' In this map there are four openings from the Frische Haff to the Baltic. 'It is certain,' says Malte Brun, 'that in 1394 the mouth of one strait was situated at Lochsett, six or eight miles north of the fortress of Pillau.' Voigt's map gives the year 1311. Id. vol. vii. p. 15. The next is the Gat of Pillau, at present the only opening to the Baltic, with the date 1510. F

At the end of syllables, and between two vowels, the Anglo-Saxon f is occasionally represented by v, the present English v; it is, therefore, probable that the Anglo-Saxon f in this position had the sound of our present v, as Luu, luf=luvu love; fif five; hæuf, hæfþ haveth; Euen, efen even. In the beginning of Anglo-Saxon words, f had the sound of the English f, as Fif five, finger finger, finn fin, fisc fish. The Rune F not only stands for the letter f, but for Feoh, which, in Anglo-Saxon, signifies money, wealth. v. feoh IV and R.ÜN.

folc-land, -lond, es; n. [folc folk, land land]. I. The land of the folk or people. It was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common, or possessed in severalty; and, in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out to individuals in the folc-gemōt, q. v. or court of the district, and the grant sanctioned by the freemen who were there present. While it continued to be folc-land, it could not be alienated in perpetuity; and, therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and was again distributed by the same authority. Spelman describes folc-land as ‘terra pöpülaris, quæ jure cōmūni possidētur—sine scripto,’ Gloss. Folcland. In another place he distinguishes it accurately from bōc-land: ‘Prædia Saxōnes duplici tītulo possidēbant; vel scripti auctōritāte, quod bōc-land vōcābant, vel pöpüli testīmōnio, quod folc-land dixēre,’ Id. Bocland:—Eāc we cwæðdon hwæs se wyrde wære ðe oðrum ryhtes wyrnde, ðor oððe on bōc-lande oððe on folc-lande, and ðæt he him geāndagode of ðam folc-lande, hwonne he him riht worhte befōran ðam gerēfan. Gif he ðonne nān riht næfde ne on bōc-lande ne on folc-lande, ðæt se wære ðe rihtes wyrnde scyldig xxx scillinga wið ðone cyning; and æt oðrum cyrre, eāc swā; æt þridan cyrre, cyninges oferhýrnesse, ðæt is cxx scillinga, būton he ær geswice also we have ordained of what he were worthy who denied justice to another, either in book-land or in folk-land, and that he should give him a term respecting the folk-land, when he should do him justice before the reeve. But if he had no right either to the book-land or to the folk-land, that he who denied the right should be liable in 30 shillings to the king; and for the second offence, the like: for the third offence, the king's penalty, that is, 120 shillings, unless he previously desist, L. Ed. 2; Th. i. 160, 10–17. All lands, whether bōc-land or folc-land, were subject to the Trinōda Necessitas. Under this denomination are comprised three distinct imposts, to which all landed possessions, not excepting those of the church, were subject, viz:—[a] Brycg-bōt for keeping the bridges and highways in repair. [b] Burh-bōt for keeping the burgis, or fortresses, in an efficient state of defence. [c] Fyrd a contribution for maintaining the military and naval force of the kingdom:—Gif hwā Burh-bōte, odde Brycg-bōte, odde Fyrd-fare forsitte; gebēte mid hund-twelftigum scillinga ðam cuningce on Engla lage, and on Dena lage, swā hit ær stōð if any one neglect Burh-bōt, or Brycg-bōt, or Fyrd-fare; let him make amends with one hundred and twenty shillings to the king by English law, and by Danish law, as it formerly stood, L. C. S. 66; Th. i. 410, 8–10. Pegenes lagu is, ðæt he sý his bōc-rihtes wyrd, and ðæt he preo þinc of his lande dō, fyrd-færd, and burh-bōte, and brycg-geweorc [MS. bryc-] thane's law is, that he be worthy to make his will, and that he perform three things for his land, military service, repairs of fortresses, and of bridges, L. R. S. 1; Th. i. 432, 1–3.

II. Folk-land was subject to many burthens and exactions from which book-land was exempt. The possessors of folk-land were bound to assist in the reparation of royal villis, and in other public works. They were liable to have travellers and others quartered on them for subsistence. They were required to give hospitality to kings and great men in their progress through the country, to furnish them with carriages and relays of horses, and to extend the same assistance to their messengers, followers, and servants, and even to the persons who had charge of their hawks, horses, and hounds. Such at least are the burthens from which lands are liberated when converted by charter into book-land.

2. Folk-land might be held by freemen of all ranks and conditions. It is a mistake to imagine with Lambarde, Spelman, and a host of antiquaries, that it was possessed by the common people only. Still less is Blackstone to be credited, when, trusting to Somner, he tells us it was land held in villenage by people in a state of downright servitude, belonging, both they and their children and effects, to the lord of the soil, like the rest of the cattle or stock upon the land. [Blackstone, ii. 92].—A deed published by Lye, exposes the error of these representations. [Anglo-Saxon Diet., App. ii. 2.] Alfred, a nobleman of the highest rank, possessed of great estates in book-land, beseeches King Alfred, in his will, to continue his folk-land to his son, Æthelwald; and if that favour cannot be obtained, he bequeaths, in lieu of it, to his son, who appears to have been illegitimate, ten hides of book-land at one place, or seven at another. From this document it follows, first, that folk-land was held by persons of rank; secondly, that an estate of folk-land was of such value, that seven, or even ten hides of book-land were not considered as more than equivalent to it; and, lastly, that it was a life-estate, not devisable by will, but in the opinion of the testator, at the disposal of the king, when by his own death it was vacated.

3. It appears also from this document, that the same person might hold estates both in book-land and in folk-land; that is, he might possess an estate of inheritance of which he had the complete disposal, unless in so far as it was limited by settlement; and with it he might possess an estate for life, revertible to the public after his decease. In the latter times of the Anglo-Saxon government it is probable there were few persons of condition who had not estates of both descriptions. Every one was desirous to have grants of folk-land, and to convert as much of it as possible into book-land. Money was given and favour exhausted for that purpose.

4. In many Saxon wills we find petitions similar to that of Alfred; but in none of them is the character of the land, which could not be disposed of without consent of the king, described with the same precision. In some wills, the testator bequeaths his land as he pleases, without asking leave of any one [Somner's Gavelkind, 88, 211; Hickes, Pref. xxxii; Diss. Epist. 29, 54, 55, 59; Madox, Formul. 395]; in others he earnestly beseeches the king that his will may stand, and then declares his intentions with respect to the distribution of his property [Lambarde, Kent, 540; Hickes, Diss. Epist. 54; Gale, i. 457; Lye's Append. ii. 1, 5; Heming, 40];—and in one instance he makes an absolute bequest of the greater part of his lands, but solicits the king's consent to the disposal of a small part of his estate [Hickes, Diss. Epist. 62]. There can be no doubt that book-land was devisable by will, unless where its descent had been determined by settlement; and a presumption, therefore, arises, that where the consent of the king was necessary, the land devised was not book-land, but folk-land. If this inference be admitted, the case of Alfred will not be a solitary instance, but common to many of the principal Saxon nobility.

5. That folk-lands were assignable to the thegns, or military servants of the state, as the stipend or reward for their services, is clearly indicated in the celebrated letter of Bede to Archbishop Egbert [Smith's Bede, 305–312]. In that letter, which throws so much light on the internal state of Northumberland, the venerable author complains of the improvident grants to monasteries, which had impoverished the government, and left no lands for the soldiers and retainers of the secular authorities, on whom the defence of the country must necessarily depend. He laments the mistaken prodigality, and expresses his fears that there will be soon a deficiency of military men to repel invasion, no place being left where they can obtain possessions to maintain them suitably to their condition. It is evident from these complaints, that the lands so lavishly bestowed on the church had been formerly the property of the public, and at the disposal of the government. If they had been book-lands, it could have made no difference to the state whether they belonged to the church or to individuals, since in both cases they were beyond its control, and in both cases were subject to the usual obligations of military service. But if they formed part of the folk-land, or property of the public, it is easy to conceive how their conversion into book-land must have weakened the state, by lessening the fund out of which its military servants were to be provided.

6. A charter of the eighth century conveys to the see of Rochester certain lands on the Medway, as they had been formerly possessed by the chiefs and companions of the Kentish kings. [Text. Roffens. 72, edit. Hearne; Kemble, Cod. Dipl. No. cxi.] In this instance folk-land, which had been appropriated to the military service of the state, appears to have been converted into book-land, and given to the church, L. Th. ii. for- is used in composition in Anglo-Saxon exactly as the English for: it often deteriorates, or gives an opposite sense, or gives strength to the words before which it is placed; in which case it may be compared with Gothic fra-, Dutch and German ver- [different from the Dutch voor, and German vor]. Forbēdan to forbid; fordēman to condemn; forçūp perverse, corrupt; fordōn to destroy, to do for.—Sometimes for denotes an increase of the signification of the word before which it is placed, and is then generally to be in English very: valde, as fōr-eāde very easily, Homl. Th. ii. 138, 35: fōr-oft very often, Bd. de nat. rerum; Wrt. popl. science 11, 8; Lchdm. iii. 256, 16. For-and fōr-, or fōre- are often confounded, though they are very different in meaning; as forseōn [Flem. versien] to overlook, despise; fōr- or fōreseōn [Flem. veursien] to foresee.—If a word, having for, fōr or fōre prefixed, cannot be found under fōr-, fōr- or fōre-, it must be sought under the simple term, and the sense of the preposition added; thus, fōr- or fōre-sendan is from sendan to send, and fōr-, fōre before, to send before, etc. [On the vowel in fōr, fōre, see remark in the preface.]

II. the foot; pēs, gen. pēdis:—The foot of a man, a measure of length, was divided into twelve equal parts or inches, v. ynce, es; m. inch; and an inch is three barley-corns in length. In Anglo-Saxon times, the people and their rulers were satisfied with the simplest weights and measures, thus a yard was three feet, of twelve inches each foot, while an inch was in length three barley-corns. In our day, the legislature passed an act so late as July 30, 1855. It is styled, An Act for legalising and preserving the restored standards of weights and measures. This Act includes the weights of George the Fourth, 1824, in which the pounds avoirdupois is fixed by a standard weight, kept in the office of the Exchequer, and one equal seven-thousandth part of such pound avoirdupois shall be a grain. Thus our measures and weights are so recently fixed by standards. v. fôt-gemet, eln, ynce, met-geard, gear, gyrð. 'In Anturs of Arther, end of 13th century, we find, st. xviii. lines 4, 5:—pp. Fulled whitened, baptized: R. Glouc. A.D. 1297; 3 p. Follode; pp. y-fulled, fullod; s. fullynge: Piers P. 1362, Wrt. small 8vo. London, Pickering, 1842, pp. 244, 322, fullynge baptizing, whitening: 398, fullynge baptizing. After this, we do not find fullod, y-fulled, fullynge; yet in A. Sax. Mk. Bos. 9, 3, we have fullere: Wyc. 1389, fullere [or walkere of cloth, note]: Tynd. 1526 and Eng. version 1611, fuller. Baptem and Baptyzm with the verb Baptise is used by Wycliffe, and Baptyme and Baptyzyn by the compiler of the Promptorium. Wycliffe also uses the 1st person of the verb I waich in Mt. 3, 11; and the two forms of the pp. waichen, waichun, in Mt. 3, 6, and Mk. 10, 38, 39. The form Bapteme seems to have been introduced into the language, through the French, by Robert Manning, called de Brunne, from Bourne, near Depyng in Lincolnshire, in his translation of Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, and to have been current, with slight variation in the orthography, till nearly the middle of the 16th century=1550. Thus the forms Baptim and Baptime appear in the version of the N. T. by Tyndale in 1526, and Baptyzm, Baptyme in that by Cranmer in 1539. In the version made by Coverdale and other Protestant exiles at Geneva in 1559, in the Anglo-Rhemish version made by Cardinal Allen and other Romanists at Rheims in 1559, and in the authorized version of 1611, the word is written Baptisme. This last form is also found in Piers P. p. 398. Ormin only uses the verb to dip, once:—Unnderr watter dippest, H. 1551. In Goth. and in other divisions of the Teutonic as well as in the Swed. and Dan. divisions of the Scandinavian branch of the Gothic language, a noun and verb are used expressive of dipping, e.g. Goth. dauppan, daupains; O. H. Ger. doufan, doufa; Dut. doopen, doop; Ger. taufen, taufe; Swed. döpa, döpsle; Dan. dōbe, daab.' Orm. ii. 626, 627. G

WHEN g is the last radical letter of an Anglo-Saxon word, and follows a long vowel or an r, it is often changed into h, but then the g is resumed when followed by a vowel; as,—Beah a ring; gen. es; m. beäges of a ring; pl. beägas rings; burh a town; gen. e; f. burge of a town; beorh a hill; gen. es; m. beorges of a hill; pl. beorgas hills. The same change takes place after a short vowel in wäþ a wall; gen. wäges. In the conjugation of verbs, in some cases, h is found taking the place of g; thus from belgan to be angry, bilhist, bilhþ; from ägan to own, ähte.

2. g is generally inserted between the vowels -ie, making -ige, -igende, etc, the first sing. pres. and part of verbs in -ian. Thus, from lufian to love, bletsian to bless, etc. are formed ic lufige I love, ic bletsige I bless, lufigende loving, bletsigende blessing.

3. In later English the place of the earlier g is often taken by y, sometimes by w; as,—Geär a year, dæg a day, dagas days. etc; morg(en) morrow, sorg = sorrow, etc.

4. The Anglo-Saxon Rune X not only stands for the letter g, but for gifu a gift; because gifu is the Anglo-Saxon name of this Rune. v. gifu II. and RÜN.

ge-, or æg-, prefixed to pronouns. v. æg-

ge-, a preposition, originally meaning with, but found only as a prefix. v. Schleicher, Die Deutsche Sprache, p. 224. In accordance with this meaning it often gives a collective sense to nouns to which it is prefixed, as, ge-brōðor brothers; ge-hūsan housefolk; ge-magas kinsmen; ge-macan mates; ge-gylða a member of a corporation or guild; ge-wita a witness, accomplice; ge-tera a companion, attendant; gescyf shoes. Ge-sometimes gives to a neuter verb an active signification, as winnan to fight, ge-winnan to win by fighting:—Wid God winnan to fight [war] with God, Cd. 18; Th. 22, 26; Gen. 346. Sige on him ge-wann he gained [won] a victory over him, Num. 21, 1. Ridan to ride; ge-ridan to reach by riding, arrive at:—Ic on wige ride I ride on a horse, Exon. 127 a; Th. 489, 14; Rā. 78, 7. Ge-rād Ædelwold ðone hām æt Winburnan postea invāsit Æthelwāldus villam āpud Winburnam, Gib. 99, 37; Chr. 901; Erl. 97, 11. On this power of ge-, Mr. Earle, in Chr. p. 321, remarks:—“A strong instance is ge-winnan [1090] = to win; which sense, now so intimately identified with this root, is not in the simple verb winnan, until compounded with ge-. Winnan is to toil, fight, contend; ge-winnan is to get by striving, fighting, contending, i. e. to win,” A. D. 685; p. 40, 16; p. 4, 25. Ge- often seems void of signification; as, ge-sēþ bliss; ge-līc like; ge-sūnd sound, healthy. In verbs it seems sometimes to be a mere augment, e. g. in the following:—Ðæt wif genam ða of ðæs treōwes wæstmte and geæt and sealde hire were: he æt ða mūlier wūlt de fructu illius et comēdit dēdūce viro suo, qui comēdit, Gen. 3, 6. It often changes the signification from literal to figurative; as, healdan to hold; ge-healdan to observe, preserve; fyllan to fill; ge-fyllan

to fulfil; biddan to bid, require; ge-biddan to pray. In the Rushworth Gloss. the prefix is often gi-. [Wyc. Piers P. Chauc. y-: Laym. i-: O. Sax. gi-: O. Frs. ge-, gi-, ie-: Dut. Ger. ge-: M. H. GEÁTAS, Iótas, Iútas, Eótenas [v. eóten, II.]; gen. a; dat. um; pl. m. I. the Jutes, the ancient inhabitants of Jutland, who, with the Angles and Saxons, colonized Britain; *Jutæ, p.*ópulus Chersónēsi Cymbricæ, qui relicta patria ūna cum Saxōnibus Angliq̃ue Britanniam occupāverunt. Though the Jutes are now regarded as Danes, they were, in the earliest times, distinguished as a separate people, and were probably the descendants of earlier Gothic settlers in Jutland, while the Danes = Dene, were an invading nation. Thus Hengest was a Jute, and Healfdene, his lord, a Dane. The Eótenas = Jötnar, were apparently a still earlier Finnish race, from whom the Gothic conquerors probably derived their trolls and giants. Both Jóti; pl. Jotar, and ióttun; pl. iótnar, are rendered in A. Sax. by eóten; pl. eótenas. From the Ynglinga-Saga, c. 5, we learn that before the time of Skiold, the seat of the Danish kings was in Reitgothland = Jutland, but Skiold transferred it to Lethra in Seeland, of which he was the founder:—Cōmon hī of þrim folcum dām strangestum Germanie, ðæt [is.] of Seaxum, and of Angle, and of Geátum. Gif preost biscopes geban forbūge if a priest decline [to obey] the bishop's edict, L. N. P. 4; Th. ii. 290, 20. II. ge-bann, -bann, es; n. the indiction; indictio, edictum. The indiction is a cycle or revolution of 15 years, like the date of the year from the Birth of our Saviour. Indiction was introduced by Augustine, through the influence of Gregory the Great. It was used by the Roman emperors in the solemn Edictum or Indictio, relative to the taxes, and adopted by the Church to denote the cycle of 15 years. The number of the Indiction was thus easily ascertained, add 3 to the year of our Lord and divide by 15, and the remainder will be the year of Indiction. If there be no remainder the Indiction will be 15. Bede, in his De Ratione Temporum, says plainly,—Si vis scire quōta sit Indictio, sūme annos Dōmīni, et adice tria, partīre per xv, et quod remanserit, ipsa est Indictio anni præsēntis, Cap. xiv. Indiction is useful in ascertaining the exact year in a reign, etc.:—Dam mildestan cýninge Cantwara, Wihtræde, rigendum, ðe fiftan wintra his rīces, ðý niguþan gebanne, in ðære stōwe ðý hātte Berghām-stýde, ðær wæs gesamnad eadigra geþeahendlic ymcyne in the reign of the most mild king of the Kentish-men, Wihtræd, in the fifth year of his reign, the ninth indiction, in the place which is called Berham, where was assembled a deliberative assembly of the great men, L. Wih. pref; Th. i. 36, 4-7. Thus, Wihtræd began to reign A. D. 691; add 5 years, this gives A. D. 696 for the deliberative assembly; add 3 by rule, the sum, 699, divided by 15, leaves 9 remainder after the division, or the year of the Indiction as in the preceding example. Rixiendum usum Dryhtene ðæm Hælendan Crist. Æfter ðon ðe agān wæs ehta hund wintra and syx and hundnigontig efter his acennednesse, and ðý feowerteodan gebonn-gere; ðā, ðý gēre, gebeon [p. of gebannan] Ædelrēd ealderman alle Mercna weotan tosomne to Gleawceastre under the rule of our Lord Jesus Christ. When 896 winters were passed after his birth, and in the 14th indiction-year; then, in that year, alderman Æthelred assembled all the witan of the Mercians together at Gloucester, Th. Diplm. A. D. 896; 139, 4-13. Thus, Æthelred assembled the witan at Gloucester in the year 896; 896 + 3 = 899; this after division by 15 leaves a remainder 14, or the year of Indiction, as stated in the foregoing example. Geban edictum, Ælf. Gl. 87; Som. 74, 43; Wrt. Voc. 50, 25. [O. Sax. ban, n. mandātum: O. Frs. ban, bon, n: Dut. ban, m: Ger. bann, m. edictum, interdictum, proscriptio: M. H. Ger. ban, m: O. H.
